Castle Haven is one of the best known landmarks in Dorchester. The house is a large brick structure with three brick wings and a frame wing. The central body of the house is the earliest part of the building and originally was a five bay long, two story brick building. On each gable a semi-octagonal wing was added in the nineteenth century. A similar addition was built in front of the original central entrance. Off of the north wing is a one story kitchen or hyphen connected to a two story hip roof wing.

The walls of the main part of the house are laid in Flemish bond above the water table and English bond below. The water table varies from a champhered brick on the east to a cyma reversa molded brick on the west. Segmental arches above the window are hidden by cornices added in the 19th century. The east door frame is original, but the window frames are probably later. All windows have 1/1 sash and louvered shutters. The two-brick belt course is partially concealed by the two story porch on the east side. A chimney pierces the roof on each side of the moderately pitched "A" roof. A drip course extends on three sides of the chimneys.

Each wing is built close to the ground so that the two full stories are lower than the principal cornice. The wings have a frieze and dentils of brick. A picture window was installed in the 20th century in the north wing, to afford a view of the river from the dining room. The entrance wing is square and lower than the others. There is a circular window above the door and a porch in front of the door.

There is a full cellar beneath the house, which is built of stone below grade. On the north side of the cellar are two rooms with arch supports for corner fireplaces above. (see description of interior) A cellar was also dug beneath the east porch.

Inside, the house is divided into a den and parlor seperated by a passage in the old part and a stair hall in the west entrance wing, a billiard room in the south wing and dining room in the north wing. Kitchens and den are located in the other extensions.

The parlor retains some handsome paneling from the second quarter of the eighteenth century, though only the paneling above the fireplace is in its original location. The room also possesses paneled window seats which appear original to the house. Above the fireplace the paneling consists of a large raised panel flanked by short stubby pilasters and three raised panels below. The sides of the fireplace are also paneled. Around the fireplace opening is a bold bolection molding. Window and door trim is also a bolection form but smaller in scale. The raised panel walls appear early, but they were probably installed from the other half of the house as the seams in the paneling are not continuous. The corridor is actually an extension Castle Haven is built on land called, Antonine, which was originally patented to Anthony LeCompte in 1659. Apparently the name Castle Haven was used early in its life for it appears in the will of John Whitley in 1701. The Laskowski Papers fail to identify a Mr. Jackson who added the extensions in the nineteenth century.

The building is one of the few brick structures dating from the second quarter of the eighteenth century. Although the building has seen some hard times, it still possesses a good deal of original detail. More research should be done on this house as it is important architecturally to Dorchester County.

of the stair hall. The original stair was probably built in the central corridor and was removed when the house was remodeled.

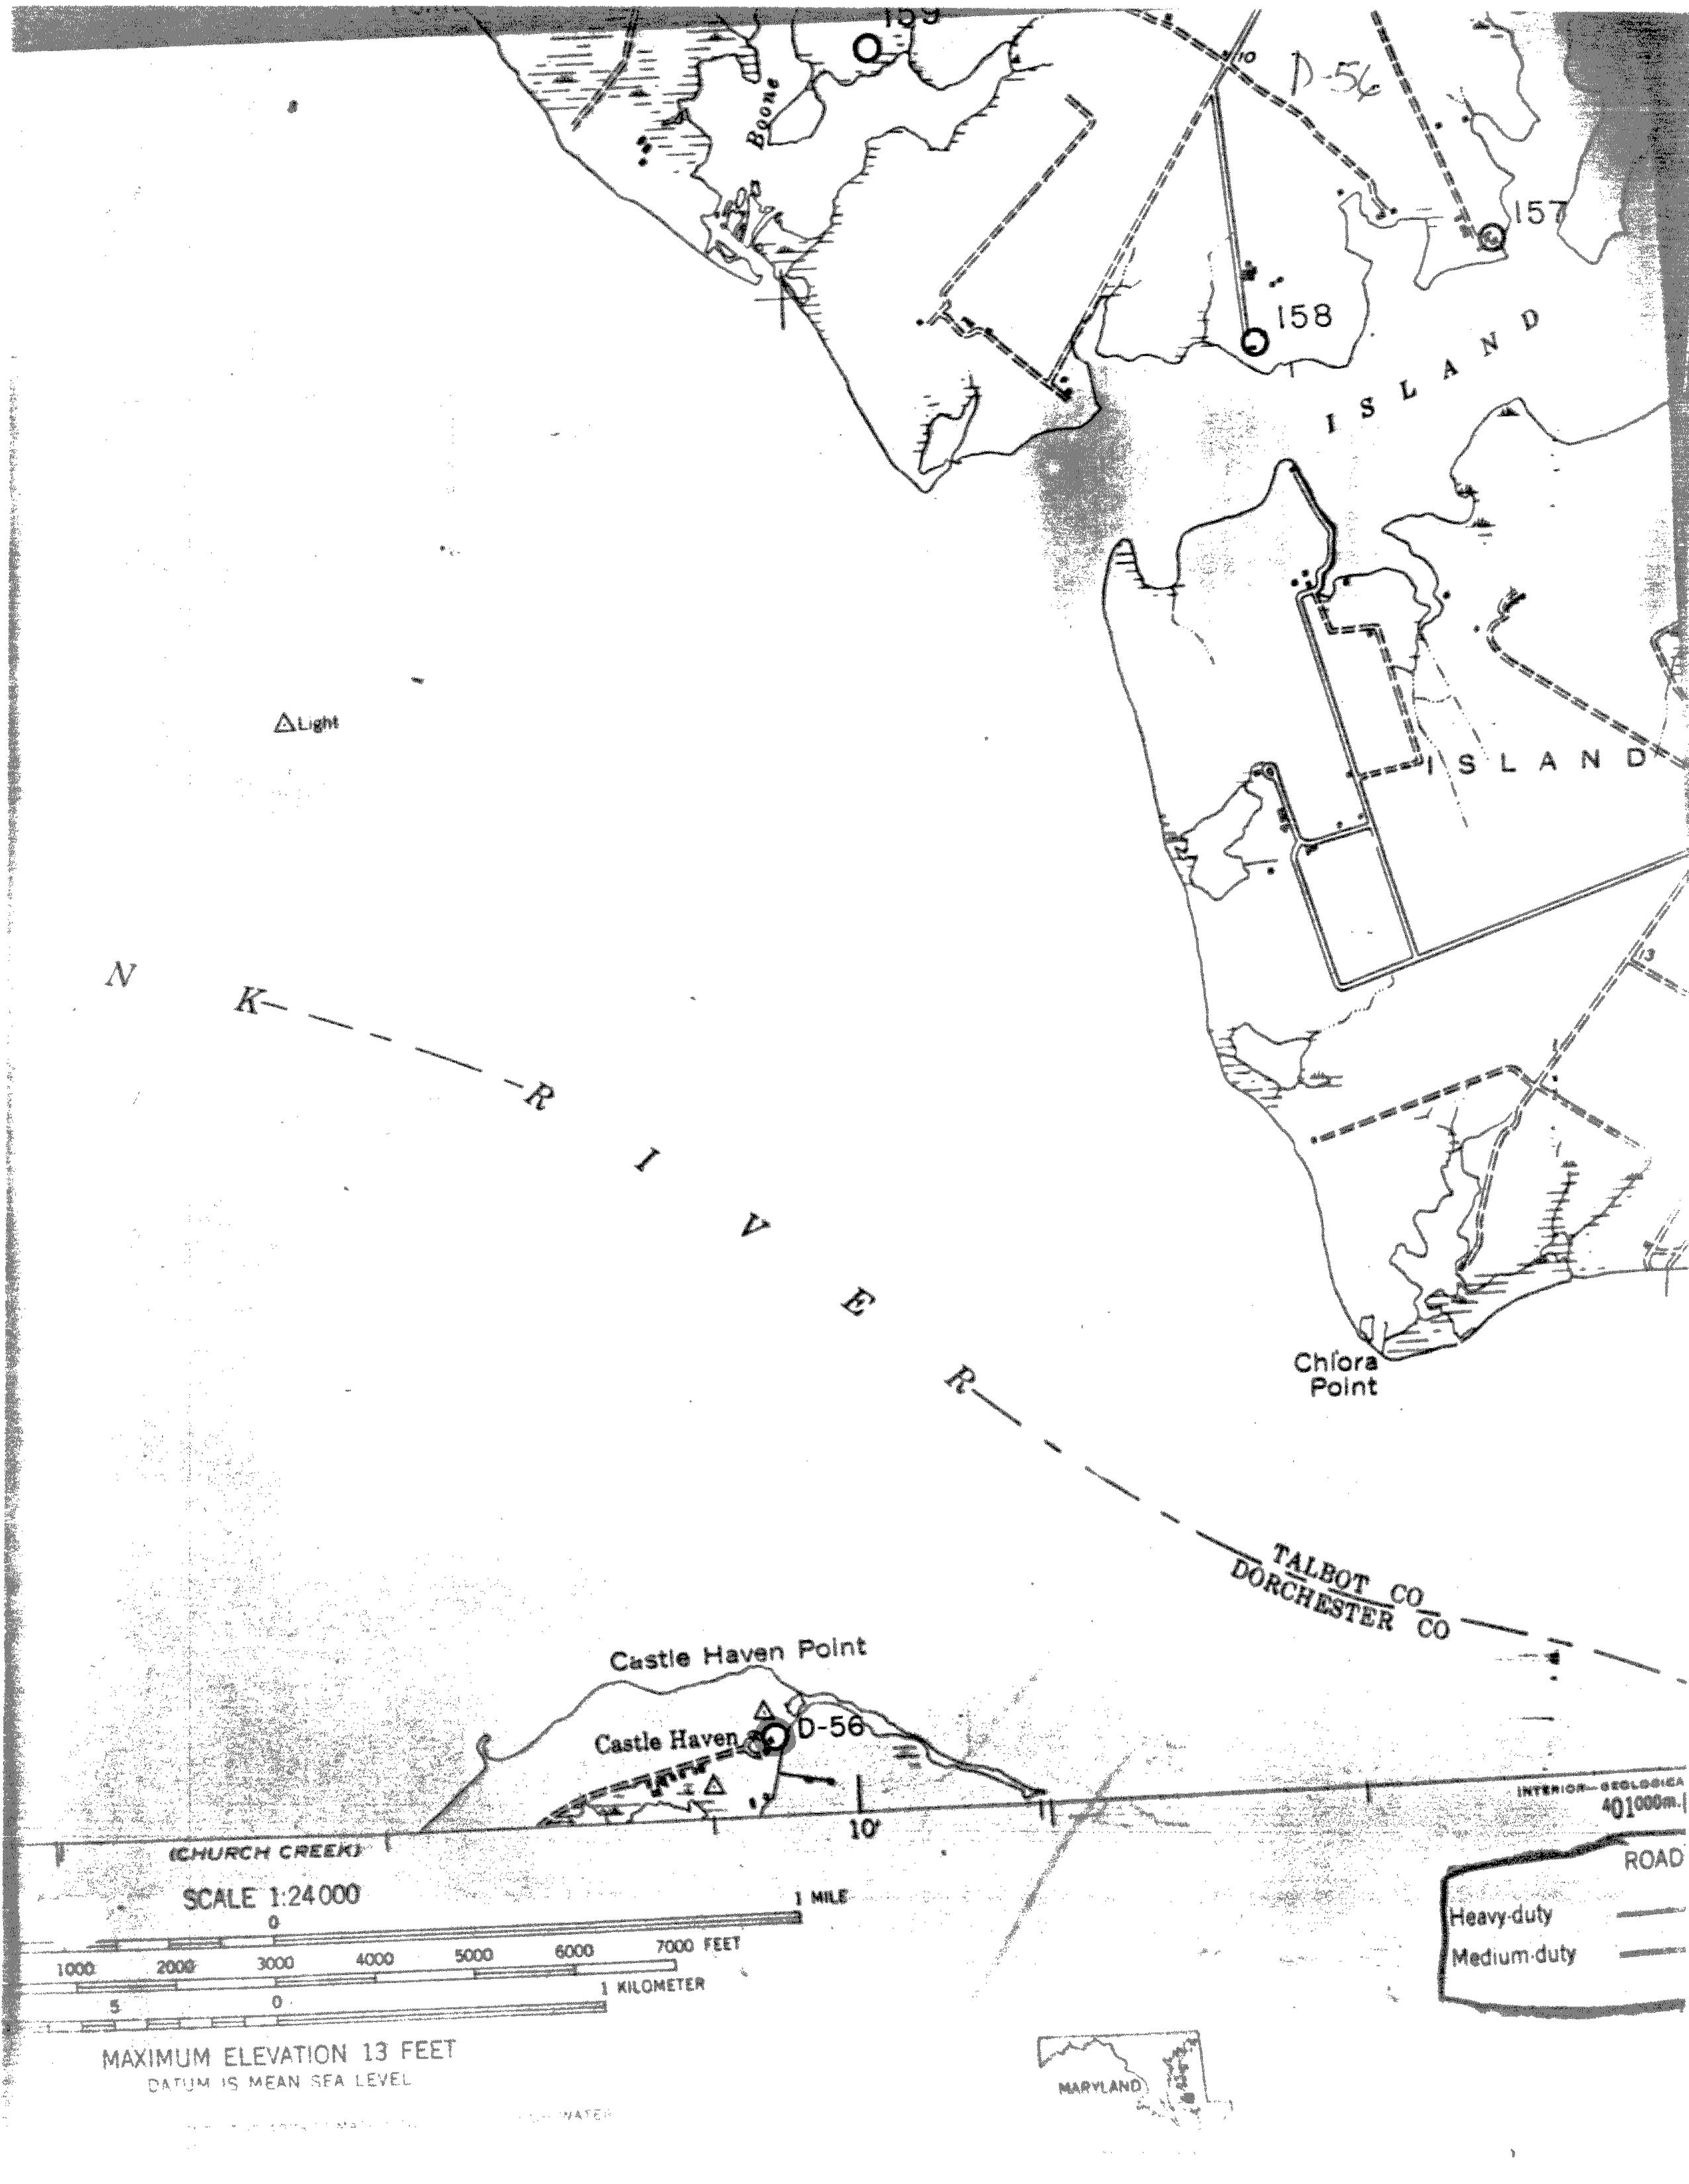

On the north side of the corridor is the den, but from the indications in the cellar, this was two rooms with corner fireplaces. These two rooms may have been the source for the paneling now in the living room. All woodwork is renewed, including the floor.

Both billiards room and dining room are plain inside, but both have fireplaces placed back-to-back with the ones in the oldest portion of the house. The rest of the building is twentieth century in date.

On the second story a corridor was made along the west wall onto which two bedrooms open. There are two baths adjoining the bed rooms and access to the porch is gained through them. There are other bedrooms and baths in the wings, but none of the second story retains 18th century trim. A large attic extends across the house and is lighted by two windows on each gable. Two doors in the attic are from the earliest period of the building.
